

Writing Unit 4

Firstly, some things might not change. People won't change, only material things. Flying cars, for example, got invented, but we realized that they were idealistic.

On the one hand, the country's politics will change in a way that nobody can predict, but, on the other hand, there are some tendencies.

People will become aware that not everything is equally important, and there are some of them that should be mandatory.

For example, as everyone wants to eat well everyday, not everyone is able to.

Moreover, I think countries will get similar to each other, and the necessities will be overly satisfied with ^{1.1} time.

Fearing the worst, some people might get lots of things, while the other part of the population won't even have a hot plate at the end of every day.

Furthermore, It can be observed nowadays that it's already happening.

Therefore, people should think about their future, and not spend all their income ^{1.2} day by day, and, if there are a lot of difficulties, they ought to focus on the important things, and give ^{1.3} to the beautiful things they already have.

In conclusion, whereas there will always be bad people that might change things for ^{1.4}, or to let others down, we all have in our hands the possibility to try our best, and to make this world a better place.
